"ON SUNNY SHORES."

Mr. Cinton Sco. arc's new volume takes the reader on a sort of sentimental fourney from Wales to Syria, not artempting to deal with facts and figures, only lingering where the fancy takes him, jumping over long stretches of inpervening country without giving any indication of his route, and dwelling only on the poetical side of what he saw. It is a nice, pleasant, desultory, easyreading sort of book, just the thing to Take up in an icle hour when one fee s like musing. The prose of the volume is agreeably diversided, here and there, with short poems in praise of the beautiful ecenes; and as Mr. Scolard is more noted as a poet than as a prose-writer, these are, as one expects to find them, real additions to the book. Here is one which may serve as a sample:

- If I were to crave one boon, Would the past but grant release, would choose me an hour from an afternoon
- In the golden air of Greece I would bask on the grassy crest
- Of that memoried mountain-hill; Above, the blue with its infinite rest. Anigh me the muses' rill.
- I would joy in the eye-delight As a lizard joys in the sun, And the beauty would melt on my raptured sight Till my soul and the score were one.

The volume is issued by Charles L Webster & Co., and so far as binding and illustration go it is a very pretty piece of 2004-making. It is marred, however, by "The Social Position of the Jews in the many hypographical errors, which make a newspaper man feel as if he were reading proof.

Iv was be a descinating exetch, because those who have known what Mr. Stevenson's ear y strugg es were have sometimes wondered that he had the Derseverance to continue in the face of so many discouragements and such frequent rejection of his manuscripta. Many persons suppose that Mr. Stevenson made a all with his instant head aver at a cook to have been "Dr. Jeyki, and Mr. Hyde." But that is because Stevenson had been heard of by only a comparatively limited number up to the time of the hubbleasion of that a legory, for in his opinion "Texy! and Hyde" is nothing but an a legory suggesting the double nature which is inherent in man-

There had been years of incessant, exhausting toil and discipline before Mr. Stevenson was able to put the fancies of his brain; no such shape as would command public approval. The story of "Felcyll and z'yce," for instance, was very long 'n ceveiopment, a Laouga it was written a most as swift y as was Dr. Coinson's "Rasselas," which Johnson wrote in a few days that he might raise the money to pay the expenses of his mother's funeral.

The idea which subsequently developed n to the story of "Jexy and Hyde" was in Stevenson's mind for a long time. He tried such results as were satisfactory to him. He had almost given up the hope of being able to produce a story which should suggest the idea of a dual nature of men, when one night, finding aimself at an o'c fashtoned inn somewhere in England, a storm razing without and he having no other companion than the fre in the grate, there fasted in his mind as by inspiration what seemed to him to be the successful way of that it would prove any more popular than some of the other axetches which he had previously written. It surprised him and of late years has somewhat annoyed him erary canons are utterly different from those watch have governed Xr. Stevenson. Howells professes to have no high regard for Dickens, Chackeray or Scott, although the greatest of Eng. sa critics, Mr. Andrew ang, has pointed out that the realism in Lackeray's nove's is equally faithful as hat to which Mr. Howells has devoted his stories and far more interesting.

Stevenson revealed in the sketch of his early life an extraordinary londness for those very romances which Mr. Howels seems to despise. He read and reread Walter Scott until he knew the novels of his countryman by heart. He had a warm and I leaned back joyfu ly in the rich place for some of Dickens' stories and was cushions of my moving penitentiary. To able to see peneara the exaggerations and myself I said: "Some folks think I cancaricatures the reve ations of human nature not travel in a foreign country without a which Dickens soughs to portray. Stev n- matron, but this would indicate that I son believed that in his best work Dickens was a consummate artist, because the illusions created by his very exaggerations were for the time being perfect.

Next to his admiration for Scott was the intense deligat which he felt for the remances of A examine Dumas-stories which looked, and they cannot enter here." The Mr. Howels, it is said, could never get in more I mought it over the more haughty terested in, and which he has passed over and offensive I became. But we did not the drawing room, and not mere creatin his critical works with the silence which seems to indicate contempt. Stevenson's iden is that in many respects L'Artago an is the finest character of modern fiction, because, he says, it seems, when you are reading "Lie Three Guardsmen." as though D'Artagnan was a fies 1 and 5.000 man-as though you knew him and were with him orned and corrupted, the guard with and deligated in his boastings, his courage and his peccadi, los. So when Stevenson began to write for the public he took precisely the apposite view from that which Mr. Howells Floressed. He believed that a story should be told for the own sake. He detested moralizing and had small use for lengthy descriptions of nature. He ciù not be leve in analysis, but thought that the characters as they worked out the story ought to suggest their own analysis, as is the case in life. Now that: these two most successful authors, differing widely in their methods, are furnishing Dae public with their literary confessions. those who desire to make repute as writers will have abundant opportunity to choose I. In the first place, I did not have a thing on which I paid duty that I could not have bought at home and in some instances been better bleased. Moreover. I could have bought on time.

There is a prepty strict ruling now, I find, at the custom house, however, regarding what one is permitted to land with, as clothing, etc., "suitable to one's station in life." In Which Many Were Engaged, With Happy Results. It was late one night during the fair when Dr. Yeager's residence be. wasrufig. The visitor was a messenger from Manager Penny of the Dahomey vilage, asking the physician to come at once tothe village and attend a parient saffering from the toothache. The doctor wentmore for the sake of the adventure than for the fee. He was shown to the occside of the woman and proceeded to examine the big teeth inclosed in a month that opened like a cellar door. To makesure which was the offending tooth, Dr. Yeager began brying around with hislittle steel instrument so familiar to all who have visited the chamber of horrors. known as a dentist's parlor. Ee accidentally touched the nerve of the aching molar, and the amazon let loose a yell that drew to her side every member of the village.

It was an excited and wildly demonstrative crowd that danced about the woman's bedside. Dr. Yeager coolly continued his work, however, and finally before the woman could prevent him. ne had sneaked from his pocket a pair of shining forceps and hooked on to the pain producing worry. Sari was not astonished, but she was burt. As the steel instrument went grashing into the gum surrounding the aching tooth the brawny woman set up a how. that set. every one of ner sisters and the placemen wild with excitement. The louderthe amazon yelled the harder Dr. Yeager pulled. She struck wildly at theman at the other end of the forceps, but the doctor's dodying powers are as acuteas they were the day he left the collegefootball team.

She finally eaped from the cot on which she reclined, and still the coctor pulled at the molar. Sari struck viciously at her torturer, but here the coctor! showed great strategy by keeping the woman's head so far in advance of her body that the blows fell short. Around and around the village went the doctor and the patient. The former tugged and kept cool. The woman made the night indeous with her cries and grew angrier every moment. Still the molar held its fown. The men in the village canced about the struggling coctor and amazon and expressed their delight at the spectacle in wild cances and peculiar cries.

The end came at last and in a most unexpected manner. Some of the villagers, beceiving that the doctor's strength was almost exhausted and admiring ther pluck he demonstrated by holding on as: ong as he had, decided to take the matter in hand, separate the man of medicine from the insanely angry womanand at the same time protect the former' from injury. Three or four men seized. the woman, and two amazons seized the doctor. The two parties pulled in opposite directions, and suddenly the bond: that united the doctor and sie of the aching molar was broken. At the same instant the woman was thrown over the heads of the attacking party at her rear, and the doctor went sailing over the shoulders of those who had seized him.

A moment later Dr. Yeager was seen: sitting on the ground holding aloft the forceps, from which projected the offending ivory that once adorned the mouth of the troubled amazon.—Chicago Zera.c.

The Lion's Attack.

A friend of mine was in the audience" when a lioness killed a trainer at the Paris hippodrome. She had been trained to avproach him from behind, rise on her aind legs and place her front paws upon his shoulders. She did so this time. Then quietly thrusting her head over his shoulder she seized aim by the throat and literally tossed him over her back. The other lions in the den fell upon him, and though he was rescued from the den he died within an hour. I asked one trainer why he never armed himself with more than a cane. Tamers rarely did, he said. There was no use. A lion's attack was like a tounderbolt. One bite, one blow with the claw, was deadly? The men stationed outside with carbines and redbot irons are there only to drive the lion off the body of his victim, so that he can be got out of the den alive and the spectators saved the norror of seeing aim devoured.—Farper's Young People.

An Aerolite In the Sea.

What is believed to be the largest aeroite that ever fel. from the region beyond our atmosphere is now lying in the shal-, low waters of the Caspian sea near the, peninsula of Asheron. It projects 12 feet above the surface at a spot where the water is known to be over 30 feet deep. In falling it made a terrific noise and illuminated the sea and land for miles around.

How Paris Utilizes Rats.

Almost everywhere in the world, except in Paris, rats are considered as a troublesome nuisance to be gotten rid of by any means possible. The Parisians, on the contrary, convert this nuisance into a useful member of society and a source of revenue. In Paris rats are collected from every possible source and placed in a great pound, where the carcass is of all animals dying in the city are thrown. These remains are speedi'y disposed of by the rats, ,which leave behind nothing but the cleanly picked bones. There are no such scavengers as rats. Four times a year these rats are rounded up and killed, and their skins are utilized in the everywhere admired form of gant de Paris, to decorate the hands of loveliness the world over. Philadelphia
